

James 5:11

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Behold, we count them happy which endure. Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the end of the Lord; that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy.

Analysis

Behold, we count them happy which endure. Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the end of the Lord; that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy. We count those blessed who endure. Job's perseverance and the Lord's compassion illustrate God's purpose. James highlights God's character: very compassionate (πολυσπλαγχνός, polusplagchnos) and merciful.

Reformed teaching on providence emphasizes God's tender mercy even in trials, as Job discovered.

Historical Context

Job's story was beloved among Jews. James appeals to it to show that suffering has divine purpose and compassionate outcome. Early Christians facing trials saw themselves in Job's narrative.
