

Jeremiah 10:17

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Gather up thy wares out of the land, O inhabitant of the fortress.

Analysis

This verse warns of coming judgment: 'Gather up thy wares out of the land, O inhabitant of the fortress.' The Hebrew imagery is of packing belongings for deportation. 'Inhabitant of the fortress' (yosheveth bammatsor) addresses those in fortified Jerusalem, trusting walls for safety. 'Fortress' provides illusion of security—but packing becomes necessary when God brings judgment. This verse transitions from the idol polemic back to immediate prophetic warning about Babylon's approach.

Historical Context

Jerusalem's inhabitants trusted the city's fortifications, especially after Hezekiah's deliverance from Assyria (701 BC). The subsequent generations assumed similar divine protection. Jeremiah warns that no fortress withstands divine judgment—better to prepare for departure than trust walls against God's decree.

Study Questions

1. What false security do people place in 'fortresses'—physical, financial, institutional—that cannot withstand divine judgment?
2. How does the command to pack possessions challenge false confidence in human protections?
