

Jeremiah 10:3

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For the customs of the people are vain: for one cutteth a tree out of the forest, the work of the hands of the workman, with the axe.

Analysis

This verse exposes idol manufacture: 'For the customs of the people are vain.' The Hebrew chuqqoth (חֻקֹּת, statutes, customs) with hevel (הֶבֶל, vanity, breath, nothing) declares religious practices worthless. 'For one cutteth a tree out of the forest, the work of the hands of the workman, with the axe.' The idol begins as a tree—created thing—cut down by human labor (charash, חָרָשׁ, craftsman) using human tools (ma'atsad, מַצֵּד, axe). The manufacturing process is mundane, ordinary, entirely human. What emerges is 'work of hands'—human product, not divine being. The polemic reduces impressive idols to their origin: firewood shaped by workers.

Historical Context

This passage parallels Isaiah 44:9-20's extended satire on idol making. Archaeological discoveries of ancient workshops reveal the idol manufacturing process: wooden cores overlaid with metal, stone carvings, clay moldings. The craftsmen who made these objects knew they were creating statues, yet somehow their products became objects of worship. The prophets expose this absurdity.

Study Questions

1. How does tracing an idol's origin to a tree cut from the forest expose idolatry's absurdity?
2. What modern 'gods' are similarly human creations that we elevate to objects of devotion?
