

Jeremiah 12:16

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And it shall come to pass, if they will diligently learn the ways of my people, to swear by my name, The LORD liveth; as they taught my people to swear by Baal; then shall they be built in the midst of my people.

Analysis

This verse extends invitation to nations: 'And it shall come to pass, if they will diligently learn the ways of my people, to swear by my name, The LORD liveth; as they taught my people to swear by Baal.' The Hebrew lamad (למד, learn) applies to nations learning Israel's ways—reversing their previous teaching Israel Baal worship. 'Then shall they be built in the midst of my people.' 'Built' (nivnu) indicates establishment, incorporation into covenant community. The former teachers of Baalism can become learners of YHWH worship and be included among God's people. This remarkable promise anticipates gentile incorporation through faith.

Historical Context

This verse anticipates gentile inclusion in God's people—remarkable given Israel's election theology. The requirement is genuine worship ('swear by my name, YHWH lives') replacing Baal allegiance. Post-exilic Judaism did incorporate some gentile proselytes, prefiguring the church's universal mission. The reversal of 'teaching'—nations who taught Baal worship learning YHWH worship—demonstrates complete transformation.
