

Jeremiah 14:2

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Judah mourneth, and the gates thereof languish; they are black unto the ground; and the cry of Jerusalem is gone up.

Analysis

The drought's effects are national: 'Judah mourneth, and the gates thereof languish; they are black unto the ground.' The 'gates' represent cities and places of commerce and justice, now failing. The phrase 'black unto the ground' suggests mourning attire (sackcloth) or drought-parched earth. The consequence extends to the national identity: 'and the cry of Jerusalem is gone up,' indicating prayer born of desperation. This verse shows that God uses physical crises to drive His people to prayer. The comprehensive nature (from gates to Jerusalem itself) reveals that no aspect of national life escapes drought's impact.

Historical Context

City gates served as commercial centers and courts. Their 'languishing' meant economic and judicial systems failing. Drought affected all social classes, creating universal crisis that should have driven corporate repentance.
