

Jeremiah 14:3

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And their nobles have sent their little ones to the waters: they came to the pits, and found no water; they returned with their vessels empty; they were ashamed and confounded, and covered their heads.

Analysis

The drought affects even the nobility: 'And their nobles have sent their little ones to the waters: they came to the pits, and found no water; they returned with their vessels empty.' The fact that nobles send servants shows water scarcity across all classes. The fruitless search ('found no water,' 'returned with their vessels empty') depicts futility under judgment. The response: 'they were ashamed and confounded, and covered their heads'—gestures of humiliation and mourning. This shows that privilege provides no immunity from God's judgments. When He withdraws blessing, all human status proves meaningless.

Historical Context

Ancient cities depended on cisterns, wells, and springs. Prolonged drought meant even traditionally reliable water sources failed. Covering the head indicated shame and distress (2 Samuel 15:30; Esther 6:12).

Study Questions

1. How does drought's effect on all classes demonstrate that privilege cannot protect from divine judgment?
2. What does empty vessels returning symbolize about human efforts apart from God's blessing?
3. How should prosperity and comfort's removal produce humility and repentance?
