

Jeremiah 15:6

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Thou hast forsaken me, saith the LORD, thou art gone backward: therefore will I stretch out my hand against thee, and destroy thee; I am weary with repenting.

Analysis

---

This verse expresses divine exhaustion: 'Thou hast forsaken me, saith the LORD, thou art gone backward: therefore will I stretch out my hand against thee, and destroy thee; I am weary with repenting.' 'Forsaken me' (natash, נָטַשׁ) indicates abandonment; 'gone backward' (achar, אָחַר) describes retreat from relationship. God's response: 'stretch out my hand' (natah yad) for destruction. The stunning phrase 'I am weary with repenting' (nil'ethi hinachem, נִלְאַיְתִי הִנָּחֵם) indicates divine exhaustion with relenting from judgment. God has repeatedly held back punishment, but patience has ended. The divine reluctance to judge, expressed throughout prophetic literature, finally yields to exhausted necessity.

Historical Context

God's 'repenting' (nacham) of judgment appears throughout Israel's history—after the golden calf (Exodus 32:14), at Nineveh (Jonah 3:10), with David (2 Samuel 24:16). But Judah's persistent rebellion exhausted divine patience. The anthropomorphic language ('weary with repenting') expresses how human unfaithfulness tests even God's longsuffering. By Jeremiah's time, the accumulated centuries of rebellion exceeded what divine patience would further tolerate.
