

Jeremiah 16:7

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Neither shall men tear themselves for them in mourning, to comfort them for the dead; neither shall men give them the cup of consolation to drink for their father or for their mother.

Analysis

More mourning customs suspended: 'Neither shall men tear themselves for them in mourning, to comfort them for the dead; neither shall men give them the cup of consolation to drink for their father or for their mother.' The 'cup of consolation' was likely ceremonial drink shared at funerals. These social comforts will cease. The phrase 'to comfort them for the dead' emphasizes mourning's consolatory function—now unavailable. Even parental death (father, mother) won't receive proper mourning. This depicts societal collapse: when traditional support structures fail, even grief cannot be properly processed. The absence of consolation illustrates judgment's comprehensive dismantling of normal life.

Historical Context

Ancient mourning rituals included communal meals and symbolic acts of solidarity with the bereaved. The prophecy envisions such devastation that these social supports collapse entirely.
