

Jeremiah 22:27

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But to the land whereunto they desire to return, thither shall they not return.

Analysis

But to the land whereunto they desire to return, thither shall they not return וְעַל-הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר-הֵם מִנְשָׁאִים אֶת-נֶפֶשׁם לְשׁוֹב שָׁם שְׁמָה לֹא יִשְׁׁבוּ (v'al-ha'arets asher-hem m'nassim et-nafsham lashuv sham shammah lo yashuvu). The phrase נֶשֶׁא נֶפֶשׁ (nasa nefesh, 'lift up the soul/desire') indicates intense longing—they would yearn for homeland constantly. But the emphatic negative לֹא (lo) plus the threefold repetition of return language (שׁוֹב, shuv—used three times) creates an insurmountable barrier.

The irony is profound: they can desire but never attain. This psychological torture—permanent homesickness—serves as temporal judgment for covenant breaking. Yet the verb שׁוֹב (shuv) also means 'repent.' Physical return to the land required spiritual return to Yahweh. Jesus later taught that longing for earthly Jerusalem without seeking the heavenly city is futile (Hebrews 11:13-16). Jehoiachin's exile prefigures humanity's exile from Eden—we long for home but cannot return except through divine grace.

Historical Context

Despite persistent hopes among Judean exiles that return was imminent (refuted by Jeremiah in chapter 29), Jehoiachin never returned to Judah. He was released from prison in Babylon after 37 years (2 Kings 25:27-30) but died in exile. His descendants, including Zerubbabel, eventually returned, but Jehoiachin himself fulfilled this prophecy by dying in the land of his captivity.
