

Jeremiah 22:29

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the LORD.

Analysis

O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the LORD (אֶרֶץ אֶרֶץ אֶרֶץ שִׁמְעִי דְבַר־יְהוָה). The threefold repetition creates urgency and solemnity—compare Isaiah's 'Holy, holy, holy' (Isaiah 6:3) or Jesus's 'Verily, verily' formulas. The prophet summons the earth itself as witness to divine decree, invoking the ancient pattern where heaven and earth serve as covenant witnesses (Deuteronomy 4:26, 30:19). The imperative שִׁמְעִי (shim'i, 'hear!'—feminine singular, addressing the land) echoes the Shema (Deuteronomy 6:4).

This cosmic appeal elevates the pronouncement beyond mere political commentary to theological ultimatum. When human leaders refuse to hear, God summons creation itself as audience. Moses similarly called heaven and earth to witness (Deuteronomy 32:1). The land that vomits out covenant-breakers (Leviticus 18:28) now must hear why. Jesus would later weep that if disciples were silenced, 'the stones would immediately cry out' (Luke 19:40). Creation itself testifies to God's judgments.

Historical Context

This oracle's dramatic introduction marks a climactic moment—the end of the Davidic monarchy's unbroken succession in Jerusalem. For four centuries (since ~1000 BC), David's line had ruled from Jerusalem. This threefold summons announces the dynasty's suspension, requiring the widest possible audience as witness. The solemnity matches the gravity of covenant curse being enacted.

Study Questions

1. What would it mean for creation itself to witness your accountability before God?
2. How does the threefold repetition emphasize the seriousness of divine pronouncements?
3. In what areas of life are you refusing to 'hear' where even the earth itself cries out against injustice?
