

Jeremiah 28:17

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

So Hananiah the prophet died the same year in the seventh month.

Analysis

So Hananiah the prophet died the same year in the seventh month (וַיָּמָת וַיָּנֶה הַנָּבִיא חַנַּנְיָה בַּשָּׁנָה הַהִיא בַּחֹדֶשׁ הַשְּׁבִיעִי, vayyamat chananyah hannavi basshanah hahi bachodesh hashvi'i)—the terse, factual reporting emphasizes fulfillment. Given in the fifth month (28:1), Hananiah died in the seventh month—approximately two months later. The verb מָוַת (mut, 'die') in Qal perfect indicates completed action. No details about cause of death are given; what matters is that Jeremiah's prophecy came true while Hananiah's did not.

This conclusion serves multiple purposes:

1. vindicates Jeremiah's prophetic authority
2. exposes Hananiah as false prophet
3. demonstrates God's justice against rebellion
4. provides testable evidence for the community to evaluate competing prophets.

The narrative's placement shows that truth ultimately prevails, though sometimes only through judgment. Hananiah's death became object lesson confirming Jeremiah's ministry. Time and events distinguish true from false prophecy when both claim divine authority. As Jesus said, 'by their fruits ye shall know them' (Matthew 7:20).

Historical Context

Hananiah's death occurred in 593 BC, four years before Jerusalem's fall. His removal from the prophetic scene prevented further false encouragement toward rebellion. However, other false prophets continued misleading Judah (Jeremiah 29:8-9, 21-23), contributing to Zedekiah's eventual revolt. Hananiah's death proved Jeremiah's prophetic authority to those willing to see, but many remained unconvinced, continuing toward catastrophe.
