

Jeremiah 30:1

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

The word that came to Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

Analysis

The word that came to Jeremiah from the LORD הַכְּבָר אֲשֶׁר-הָיָה אֶל-יְרֵמִיָּהוּ מִאֶת (הַזֹּאת)—Chapter 30 begins the 'Book of Consolation' (chs. 30-33), pivoting from judgment to promise. The prophetic formula hayah el (came to) emphasizes divine origin—not Jeremiah's speculation but God's self-revelation.

After 29 chapters of relentless judgment, this transition signals God's covenant faithfulness. Even as Babylon besieges Jerusalem (588-586 BC), God reveals restoration beyond exile. The placement is strategic—hope grounded in God's character, not circumstances. This word establishes the theological foundation for chapters that promise new covenant (31:31-34), return from captivity, and Messianic restoration.

Historical Context

Received during the final siege of Jerusalem (588-586 BC), when Jeremiah was imprisoned for 'treason' (32:2). As the city faced starvation and impending destruction, God commanded him to write promises of future restoration—a prophetic act of defiant hope.
