

Jeremiah 31:38

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that the city shall be built to the LORD from the tower of Hananeel unto the gate of the corner.

Analysis

The city shall be built to the LORD (תָּבֹנָה הַעַיר לִיהְוָה)—Jerusalem's reconstruction is la-YHWH, 'belonging to the LORD,' marking it as holy space, not merely civic restoration. The Hebrew banah (built) contrasts with earlier 'plucked up and thrown down' (v. 40, echoing 1:10). Specific landmarks—the tower of Hananeel unto the gate of the corner—delineate the northern boundary of the rebuilt city.

The Tower of Hananel stood at the northeast corner (Nehemiah 3:1, 12:39), while the Corner Gate marked the northwest (2 Kings 14:13). This precision serves multiple purposes: it grounds eschatological hope in recognizable geography, shows God's intimate knowledge of His city, and anticipates the detailed temple vision of Ezekiel 40-48. Zechariah 14:10-11 echoes this same boundary description for the Messianic Jerusalem.

Historical Context

Hananeel means 'God is gracious'—apt symbolism for a restoration prophecy. The Corner Gate area was breached by enemies (2 Chronicles 25:23, 26:9), so its restoration signifies complete security. Zerubbabel's post-exilic rebuilding (520-516 BC) partially fulfilled this, but Zechariah and Revelation point to ultimate fulfillment in the New Jerusalem.

Study Questions

1. Why does God include such specific geographical detail in prophecy about future restoration?
2. What does it mean for a city to be 'built to the LORD' rather than merely rebuilt for human habitation?
3. How do these physical promises to Israel inform Christian hope in the 'city whose builder and maker is God' (Hebrews 11:10)?
