

Jeremiah 34:13

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel; I made a covenant with your fathers in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondmen, saying,

Analysis

I made a covenant with your fathers in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondmen (ברית קרת, berit karati—"I cut a covenant"). God anchors His indictment in the Exodus deliverance, the foundational saving act that created covenant obligation. The phrase beyt avadim ("house of bondmen/slaves") creates devastating irony: God freed them from Egyptian slavery, yet they now re-enslaved their Hebrew brothers, violating the very purpose of redemption.

The covenant reference points to Deuteronomy 15:12-15, where slave release laws explicitly invoke Exodus memory: "remember that thou wast a bondman in the land of Egypt." Jeremiah's contemporaries knew this law but disregarded it. Their refusal to free Hebrew slaves demonstrated amnesia regarding God's saving grace—the root of all covenant breaking. As redeemed people should extend redemption to others, Israel's failure to release slaves revealed they'd forgotten their own slave-past and God's liberating character.

Paul later uses similar logic in Ephesians 4:32 and Colossians 3:13—forgive as God in Christ forgave you. The pattern is consistent: experiencing God's deliverance creates obligation to extend grace. Refusal to do so questions whether one truly grasped God's salvation. Reformed theology's emphasis on grace producing grateful obedience finds Old Testament foundation here.

Historical Context

The Exodus covenant (c. 1446 or 1260 BCE depending on dating) included comprehensive social legislation protecting the vulnerable. Deuteronomy 15:12-18 mandated releasing Hebrew servants after six years, explicitly grounding this in Israel's Egyptian bondage. By Jeremiah's time (c. 587 BCE), these laws were systematically ignored—the powerful exploited the poor, treating covenant brothers as permanent property. This contributed to social collapse preceding Babylon's conquest.

1. How does remembering your own 'slavery' to sin and God's deliverance affect your treatment of others?
2. In what ways might Christians today violate the spirit of redemption by exploiting those whom Christ also died to save?
3. Why does forgetting God's past grace inevitably lead to present disobedience?
