

Jeremiah 36:11

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

When Michaiah the son of Gemariah, the son of Shaphan, had heard out of the book all the words of the LORD,

Analysis

When Michaiah the son of Gemariah, the son of Shaphan—The genealogy is significant: Shaphan was Josiah's secretary who discovered the Book of the Law (2 Kings 22:8). This family had spiritual DNA of responding rightly to Scripture. Had heard out of the book all the words of the LORD (שָׁמַע מֵעַל הַסֵּפֶר אֶת־כָּל־דִּבְרֵי יְהוָה, shama me'al hasepher et-kol-divrei YHWH)—The verb שָׁמַע (shama) appears repeatedly in Jeremiah 36, creating a motif: will they hear unto obedience?

Michaiah represents the faithful remnant who hears and acts. Unlike the majority who heard without heeding, he immediately takes action. The phrase "all the words" emphasizes he grasped the complete message, not selective listening. This verse sets up the contrast between faithful hearing (Shaphan's family) and rebellious hearing (Jehoiakim).

Historical Context

Michaiah belonged to the third generation of Shaphan's family serving in government. His grandfather Shaphan had been instrumental in Josiah's reforms (640-609 BC). This family represented the best of Judah's scribal-prophetic tradition, bridging official circles and authentic faith. Their consistent support of Jeremiah across decades shows covenant faithfulness.
