

Jeremiah 48:12

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will send unto him wanderers, that shall cause him to wander, and shall empty his vessels, and break their bottles.

Analysis

I will send unto him wanderers, that shall cause him to wander (שְׁלַחְתִּי לְךָ תְּדַבֵּר) — The Hebrew tso'im (wanderers/tilters) uses wine-making imagery: invaders will 'tilt' Moab like workers pouring wine from jar to jar, empty his vessels, and break their bottles (טְבַלְּתָהֶם יַנְפְּצָו). Moab had been undisturbed like wine left on its sediment (v. 11), developing a false sense of security.

The metaphor contrasts Moab's stagnant complacency with God's disruptive judgment. Wine left on its dregs becomes bitter; nations that rest in prosperity without repentance face violent upheaval. The Babylonian invasion would shatter Moab's containers of self-reliance, exposing the worthlessness of idolatry and military might.

Historical Context

Jeremiah prophesied this oracle against Moab (c. 605-586 BC) before Nebuchadnezzar's Babylonian campaigns devastated Transjordan. Moab, descended from Lot (Genesis 19:37), had long-standing hostility with Israel. The wine-making metaphor would resonate with Moab's agricultural economy in the fertile plateau east of the Dead Sea.

Study Questions

1. What 'sediment' of complacency or self-reliance has settled in your spiritual life because you've been undisturbed too long?
2. How does God's 'tilting' judgment serve a refining purpose, even when it involves breaking our comfortable containers?
3. In what ways might prosperity and peace become spiritually dangerous if they lead to stagnation rather than growth?
