

Jeremiah 49:35

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Behold, I will break the bow of Elam, the chief of their might.

Analysis

---

Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Behold, I will break the bow of Elam (הִנֵּנִי שָׁבֵר) — Hineni ('behold, I am about to') signals imminent divine action. Elam was famed for archers (Isaiah 22:6), making the bow their military pride and economic strength (archery skills were marketable as mercenaries). God's breaking of their bow parallels His breaking of Babylon's weapons (51:56) and demonstrates that no human military advantage survives divine opposition.

The chief of their might (רְאֵשִׁית גְּבוּרָתָם) — Their 'firstfruits' or 'best' of military strength. The bow represented not just weaponry but national identity and confidence. When God breaks it, He dismantles their entire security apparatus. This surgical strike on Elam's specialty reveals God's intimate knowledge of each nation's distinctive strengths—and His power to neutralize them. Human expertise means nothing against the Almighty.

Historical Context

Elamite archers appear in Assyrian reliefs and Persian armies. Their archery reputation dated to the 3rd millennium BC. When Elam was subjugated by Persia (circa 550s BC under Cyrus), their military independence ended—the 'bow' was indeed broken as they became Persian subjects rather than independent military actors.

Study Questions

1. Why does God target the specific strength (archery) of each nation in His judgments?
2. What modern 'bows'—distinctive national or personal strengths—might we wrongly trust in for security?
3. How does the 'breaking' motif demonstrate God's active, personal involvement in humbling the proud?
