

Jeremiah 6:16

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Thus saith the LORD, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, We will not walk therein.

Analysis

God commands His people to 'stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way.' This call to return to ancient covenant faithfulness contrasts with innovation and compromise. The promise 'ye shall find rest unto your souls' (echoed by Jesus in Matthew 11:29) offers peace through obedience. However, the people's response—'We will not walk therein'—demonstrates willful rebellion. Reformed theology values the 'old paths' of historic orthodoxy, recognizing that truth is not discovered but received from God's revelation. The refusal to walk in God's ways despite clear direction shows human autonomy asserting itself against divine authority.

Historical Context

During Josiah's reform (2 Kings 22-23), the rediscovered Book of the Law called Judah back to covenant faithfulness. However, after Josiah's death, the people quickly reverted to idolatry, rejecting the 'old paths.'

Study Questions

1. What are the 'old paths' that contemporary Christianity needs to recover?
2. How do we distinguish between legitimate development of doctrine and departure from biblical truth?
3. Why does the human heart resist returning to tried and tested ways of faithfulness to God?
