

Jeremiah 6:8

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Be thou instructed, O Jerusalem, lest my soul depart from thee; lest I make thee desolate, a land not inhabited.

Analysis

Despite the severe condemnation, God offers a final warning: 'Be thou instructed' (Hebrew 'yasar'—disciplined, corrected). This demonstrates divine patience, giving opportunity for repentance even as judgment approaches. The threat 'lest my soul depart from thee' uses anthropomorphic language to describe God withdrawing His covenant presence. The consequences are stark: desolation and abandonment ('a land not inhabited'). This verse encapsulates the Reformed understanding of God's character: He is both just in judgment and merciful in warning, delighting more in repentance than destruction (Ezekiel 33:11).

Historical Context

Jeremiah's prophetic ministry spanned the final decades before Jerusalem's fall, repeatedly calling for repentance. This warning represents God's persistent efforts to turn Judah from destruction through prophetic witness.
