

Jeremiah 9:16

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

I will scatter them also among the heathen, whom neither they nor their fathers have known: and I will send a sword after them, till I have consumed them.

Analysis

This verse describes scattering judgment: 'I will scatter them also among the heathen, whom neither they nor their fathers have known.' The Hebrew patsats (פָּצַץ, scatter, disperse) with goyim (גּוֹיִם, nations) describes exile among foreign peoples. 'Whom neither they nor their fathers have known' emphasizes the foreignness, alienation, and disorientation of exile—not just distant but completely unknown territory. 'And I will send a sword after them, till I have consumed them' indicates that exile itself wasn't the complete judgment—persecution, warfare, and death would pursue them even in dispersion. The 'sword' (cherev) follows them; there is no escape.

Historical Context

The Babylonian exile scattered Judeans across the Neo-Babylonian Empire. Some fled to Egypt (Jeremiah 43-44); others were resettled throughout Mesopotamia. The promise of continuing sword fulfills Deuteronomy 28:64-67's curse of dispersion with fear and trembling. Historical records show that Jewish communities in Babylon and Egypt faced various persecutions over subsequent centuries, though some also prospered.

Study Questions

1. How does exile among unknown nations represent complete disorientation from the covenant blessings of land and community?
2. What does the pursuing sword teach about the impossibility of escaping divine judgment through geographical relocation?
