

Job 11:16

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Because thou shalt forget thy misery, and remember it as waters that pass away:

Analysis

Zophar promises Job will 'forget' (נָשָׁח, tishkach) his misery (אִמָּל, amal—toil, trouble), remembering it only 'as waters that pass away' (מַיִם עֹבְרִים, mayim avru). The imagery suggests suffering becoming like floodwaters that recede, leaving only a memory. This contains truth—God does heal and restore (Revelation 21:4, Isaiah 65:17). However, Zophar's timeline is wrong; he promises immediate relief upon repentance. The reality is more complex: God does eventually wipe away all tears, but often through suffering, not around it. Job's restoration comes in God's timing, not according to Zophar's formula. The Reformed doctrine of providence affirms God's good purposes work through, not despite, our afflictions.

Historical Context

Ancient Near Eastern wisdom often promised quick relief for the repentant. The book of Job subverts this prosperity gospel by showing that God's ways are more mysterious and His purposes deeper than simple cause-and-effect.
