

Job 11:20

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But the eyes of the wicked shall fail, and they shall not escape, and their hope shall be as the giving up of the ghost.

Analysis

Zophar concludes with warning: 'the eyes of the wicked shall fail' (תִּכְלִין, tikhlenah—be consumed, perish), 'they shall not escape' (אֵבֶד מְנוּס, avad manos—refuge perishes), and 'their hope shall be as the giving up of the ghost' (מַפְחַת נֶפֶשׁ, mapach-nefesh—breathing out of soul, death). This orthodox warning echoes Psalm 112:10 and Proverbs 10:28. The 'giving up of the ghost' is a stark image—their hope expires like a dying breath. The theology is sound: the wicked ultimately perish. The implication against Job is false: Zophar suggests Job faces this fate unless he repents of unspecified sins. He uses the doctrine of judgment as a weapon. Biblical warnings about judgment should drive us to Christ, not be deployed against fellow sufferers.

Historical Context

Ancient Israelite theology clearly distinguished the fate of the righteous and wicked. Zophar stands in this tradition but misapplies it, placing Job in the category of 'the wicked' based solely on his suffering.

Study Questions

1. How do we proclaim the reality of divine judgment without presuming to know who falls under it?
2. What is the difference between biblical warning and spiritual manipulation through fear?
