

Job 13:9

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Is it good that he should search you out? or as one man mocketh another, do ye so mock him?

Analysis

Is it good that he should search you out? (הַטוֹב כִּי־יַחְקֹר אֶתְכֶם, hatov ki-yakhqor etkhem)—Job turns the tables on his accusers. Yakhqor means 'to examine thoroughly, investigate, search out'—the same word used of God searching hearts (Psalm 139:1). Job warns that the divine scrutiny they invoke against him will expose their own falsehood.

As one man mocketh another, do ye so mock him?—The Hebrew hatalu (mock, deceive) implies treating someone as a fool. Job accuses his friends of attempting to deceive God with pious platitudes and false testimony, as if the Almighty could be manipulated like a human judge accepting bribes of religious rhetoric.

Historical Context

In ancient judicial systems, bearing false witness was a capital offense (Deuteronomy 19:16-21). Job's friends believed they were defending God's honor by insisting on Job's hidden guilt, but Job argues they're committing perjury—offering false testimony to make God's actions appear just.
