

Job 14:12

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

So man lieth down, and riseth not: till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep.

Analysis

'So man lieth down, and riseth not: till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep.' The imagery: man 'lieth down' (שָׁכַב, shakhav) and 'riseth not' (לֹא-יָקִיּוּם, lo-yaqum), remaining unawakened 'till the heavens be no more' (עַד-בִּלְתִּי שָׁמַיִם, ad-bilti shamayim). This seems to deny resurrection, but actually affirms it won't occur until cosmic renewal. 'Sleep' (שְׁנָתָם, shenatam) as a death metaphor appears throughout Scripture (1 Thessalonians 4:13-14). Job here glimpses, however dimly, that resurrection awaits new creation. The Reformed eschatology of new heavens and new earth (2 Peter 3:13, Revelation 21:1) fulfills this hope.

Historical Context

The phrase 'till the heavens be no more' suggests Job understood death's reversal required cosmic transformation, anticipating later biblical revelation about new creation as resurrection's context.

Study Questions

1. How does resurrection hope depend on new creation hope?
2. What does the connection between personal resurrection and cosmic renewal teach us about redemption's scope?
