

Job 15:6

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Thine own mouth condemneth thee, and not I: yea, thine own lips testify against thee.

Analysis

Thine own mouth condemneth thee, and not I: yea, thine own lips testify against thee—Eliphaz claims neutrality: 'I'm not condemning you—you're condemning yourself.' The Hebrew legal terminology yarshi'echa (יָרִשִׁיעָךְ, 'condemns you') and ya'anū (יָאָנוּ, 'testify') creates a courtroom scene where Job is both defendant and prosecution witness. Eliphaz positions himself as mere observer of Job's self-incrimination.

This is sophisticated blame-shifting: Eliphaz delivers harsh judgment while claiming he's simply agreeing with Job's own words. It's a rhetorical strategy that allows maximum condemnation with minimum responsibility. Yet God's verdict in 42:7 reverses everything—Eliphaz's 'neutral observation' was in fact false testimony, while Job's passionate protests were truthful speech.

Historical Context

Ancient Near Eastern legal proceedings relied heavily on witness testimony and self-incriminating statements. Eliphaz manipulates this framework to make Job appear guilty by his own admission—a tactic still used in coercive interrogations today.
