

Job 18:12

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

His strength shall be hungerbitten, and destruction shall be ready at his side.

Analysis

---

The wicked's strength fails: 'His strength shall be hungerbitten, and destruction shall be ready at his side.' Hunger-bitten strength suggests weakening from deprivation—vigor sapped by lack. Destruction stands ready, waiting to strike. Bildad describes comprehensive weakness and imminent danger. While applicable to some wicked, this doesn't explain Job's situation. Job's losses came suddenly through Satan's attacks, not gradual weakening from sin-caused deprivation.

Historical Context

Ancient understanding recognized that hunger and deprivation weakened people physically and mentally. Besieged cities experienced this progressive weakening. Bildad applies siege imagery to individual judgment, assuming Job's condition indicates such divine siege.

Study Questions

1. How do we distinguish suffering that results from our choices versus suffering that comes from external attack?
2. What does Job's story teach about Satan's role in suffering beyond simple punishment?
3. How does understanding spiritual warfare transform our interpretation of trials?
