

Job 20:25

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

It is drawn, and cometh out of the body; yea, the glittering sword cometh out of his gall: terrors are upon him.

Analysis

It is drawn, and cometh out of the body (שָׁלַף וַיֵּצֵא מִגְּבָה, shalaph vayyetse miggevah)—the arrow is pulled out from the torso, the verb shalaph meaning to draw out or extract. The glittering sword cometh out of his gall (וְבָקָר מִמְּרֹרֶתָו, uvaraq mimerortho yetse)—baraq means lightning or glittering blade; meroroth (gall/bile) represents the vital organs. The withdrawal of the weapon causes maximum agony.

Terrors are upon him (עַלְיוֹ אֵימִים, alav emim)—emim denotes overwhelming dread, the same word describing primeval giants (Deuteronomy 2:10). Zophar paints death as traumatic terror, not peaceful passing. His graphic description reveals his cruelty toward suffering Job—he wants Job to envision this violent end as his deserved fate.

Historical Context

Ancient warfare involved brutal close combat. Arrows and spears often remained embedded in bodies until extracted—a secondary trauma. Zophar's audience would vividly imagine this scenario. The 'terrors' may also reference death's psychological horror in ancient Near Eastern thought, where Sheol represented shadowy, joyless existence. Without clear resurrection hope, death inspired profound dread.

Study Questions

1. How does Zophar's description of death's terrors contrast with the believer's hope in Christ who conquered death?
2. What does Zophar's graphic cruelty toward Job reveal about how theology can be weaponized?
3. How should we speak about divine judgment without delighting in others' potential destruction?
