

Job 21:9

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Their houses are safe from fear, neither is the rod of God upon them.

Analysis

Their houses are safe from fear (בְּתֵיָּהֶם שְׁלוֹמִים מִפָּחָד, bateihem shalom mipachad)—The word shalom (שְׁלוֹמִים) means peace, safety, or wholeness. Pachad (פָּחָד) denotes terror or dread. Job observes that the wicked live in security, free from the anxiety that haunts the righteous sufferer. This directly contradicts his friends' claims that the wicked live in constant dread (15:20-24, 18:11).

Neither is the rod of God upon them (וְלֹא שֵׁבֶט אֱלֹהִים עָלֵיהֶם, velo shevet Eloah aleihem)—The shevet (שֵׁבֶט) or rod represents divine discipline and judgment. Job asserts that God's punishing hand doesn't touch the wicked as his friends claimed. This echoes Psalm 73:5, 'They are not in trouble as other men.' Job's argument anticipates Asaph's similar struggle with wicked prosperity until entering God's sanctuary revealed their ultimate destiny (Psalm 73:17-20).

Historical Context

Ancient Near Eastern retribution theology insisted divine punishment was swift and certain. The Code of Hammurabi and Egyptian wisdom literature assumed moral causation—evil deeds produced immediate consequences. Job's observation that the wicked often escape divine discipline in this life challenged the dominant theological paradigm. Later biblical writers wrestled with the same tension (Psalms 37, 73; Ecclesiastes; Habakkuk 1:2-4).
