

Job 22:17

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Which said unto God, Depart from us: and what can the Almighty do for them?

Analysis

Which said unto God, Depart from us—(בְּאָמָרִים לֹאֵל סֹר מִמְּנָנוּ) Sur mimmennu (depart from us) represents willful rejection of God's authority. Eliphaz quotes the wicked man's defiant cry (compare Job 21:14, where Job quoted this same phrase—but as the wicked's words, not his own!).

What can the Almighty do for them?—(וְמִה-פָּעַל שָׁמָיִם לָהוּ) This rhetorical question expresses practical atheism: God is irrelevant to our prosperity. Shaddai (Almighty) emphasizes God's power, making the dismissal more blasphemous. Crucially, Eliphaz has taken Job's quotation of the wicked out of context. Job cited this in chapter 21 to challenge retribution theology (the wicked prosper!), explicitly distancing himself from their philosophy (21:16). Eliphaz either hasn't listened or deliberately misrepresents Job's words.

Historical Context

The demand 'Depart from us' appears in wisdom literature as the ultimate expression of rebellion against God. Ancient Near Eastern thought recognized the connection between acknowledging deity and receiving blessing. To dismiss God was to invite curse—yet Job observed that the wicked often prospered despite this (21:7-13).

Study Questions

1. How does Eliphaz's misuse of Job's own words illustrate the danger of hearing selectively what confirms our biases?
2. What is the difference between Job's honest wrestling with why the wicked prosper versus the wicked's dismissal of God?
3. When have you seen someone's words twisted to mean the opposite of their actual intent?
