

Job 22:25

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Yea, the Almighty shall be thy defence, and thou shalt have plenty of silver.

Analysis

The Almighty shall be thy defence—The Hebrew betser (בֶּצֶר) means fortified place, stronghold, or precious ore. Eliphaz plays on words: instead of hoarding gold ore (betsir, v. 24), Job should find his security in Shaddai (שַׁדַּי, the Almighty) as his betser. Thou shalt have plenty of silver uses to'aphot kesef (תּוֹשֵׁפוֹת כֶּסֶף), literally 'heights/abundances of silver,' suggesting overflowing wealth.

The theology is partially sound: God should be our ultimate security (Psalm 18:2, Proverbs 18:10). However, Eliphaz implies this is conditional on repentance from imaginary sins. True faith trusts God as refuge even when He permits the loss of all earthly securities—the very lesson Job embodies (1:21). Paul learned this paradox: godliness with contentment is great gain, and true riches come through knowing Christ (1 Timothy 6:6, Philippians 3:8).

Historical Context

The name Shaddai (often translated 'Almighty') appears 31 times in Job, more than any other biblical book, reflecting the patriarchal era's preferred divine title. It emphasizes God's power and self-sufficiency. The promise of material abundance through righteousness was central to Ancient Near Eastern covenant theology, reaching full expression in Deuteronomy 28.
