

Job 23:9

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

On the left hand, where he doth work, but I cannot behold him: he hideth himself on the right hand, that I cannot see him:

Analysis

On the left hand, where he doth work, but I cannot behold him (בְּשִׂמְאָול, bis'mol ba'asoto v'lo-achaz)—The left hand (שִׂמְאָול, s'mol) represents the north in Hebrew spatial orientation. Job searches for God in every direction but cannot chazah (behold, perceive) divine presence. The verb asah (work, do) indicates God actively operates in human history, yet remains imperceptible to Job's senses.

He hideth himself on the right hand, that I cannot see him (יַעֲטֵף יָמִין וְלֹא, ya'tof yamin v'lo er'eh)—Ataf means to envelop, cover, or wrap oneself, suggesting deliberate concealment. The right hand (ימין, yamin) signifies south. Job's directional search (north/left, south/right, combined with vv. 8's east and west) represents comprehensive seeking—yet God remains hidden. This paradox of divine hiddenness amid divine activity became central to theology: Deus absconditus (the hidden God) who works invisibly yet powerfully. Isaiah echoes: 'Verily thou art a God that hidest thyself' (Isaiah 45:15).

Historical Context

Written during Job's darkest hour, this verse captures the painful experience of divine absence despite continued faith. Ancient Near Eastern religions emphasized visible manifestations of deity through idols, natural phenomena, or temple presence. Job's theology of an invisible yet active God anticipates biblical monotheism that forbids graven images (Exodus 20:4) and emphasizes God's spiritual nature (John 4:24).

Study Questions

1. How do you maintain faith when God seems hidden despite evidence of His work in the world?
2. What does Job's directional search teach about the futility of seeking God through physical perception alone?
3. How does Christ as the visible image of the invisible God (Colossians 1:15) answer Job's longing to behold God?
