

Job 25:2

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Dominion and fear are with him, he maketh peace in his high places.

Analysis

Dominion and fear are with him (מִמְשָׁלָה יִפְנַד עָמוֹ)—Bildad emphasizes God's absolute sovereignty (מִשְׁלָה, memshalah) and the terror (פִּנְדָּה, pachad) He inspires. While theologically true, Bildad wields these truths as weapons rather than comfort. He maketh peace in his high places (עֲשָׂה שָׁלוֹם בָּמָרֹמָיו)—The participle emphasizes God's continual cosmic ordering. The meromav ('high places') refers to the heavenly realm where God governs angelic hosts.

Ironically, Bildad describes divine transcendence to silence Job's complaints, yet Job craves precisely this sovereign God's personal attention (Job 23:3-5). The theology is orthodox but pastorally bankrupt—accurate doctrine deployed without love becomes a 'noisy gong' (1 Corinthians 13:1). Bildad's God is distant sovereign, not covenant Father.

Historical Context

Ancient Near Eastern cosmology conceived of divine councils where gods maintained cosmic order. Bildad's reference to God making peace 'in his high places' reflects this widespread worldview, adapted to monotheistic Israelite faith. The book of Job frequently engages these cosmological concepts (see Job 1:6-12, 38:7).
