

Job 26:9

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

He holdeth back the face of his throne, and spreadeth his cloud upon it.

Analysis

---

He holdeth back the face of his throne—The verb achaz (אָחַז) means to grasp, seize, or restrain, while pene kise (פְּנֵי כִסֵּא) literally means 'the face of [his] throne.' Job describes God veiling His throne's glory from human sight. And spreadeth his cloud upon it uses parshez (פָּרֹשֶׁת, spreading) with anan (אָנָן, cloud), the divine covering that both reveals and conceals God's presence (Exodus 19:9, 1 Kings 8:10-11).

This poetic image captures God's transcendence—His glory is too overwhelming for creatures to behold directly. The cloud represents both God's presence and the necessary mediation between holy God and sinful humanity. Moses couldn't see God's face and live (Exodus 33:20), yet Christ is 'the brightness of his glory' (Hebrews 1:3), making the invisible God visible (John 1:18, Colossians 1:15). Job's theology anticipates incarnation: God veils His glory to enable relationship with His creatures.

Historical Context

The cloud imagery pervades Israel's exodus experience—the pillar of cloud by day (Exodus 13:21), the cloud covering Sinai (Exodus 19:16), and the cloud filling the tabernacle (Exodus 40:34-35). For Job, living before these events, to speak of God's self-veiling throne demonstrates remarkable theological insight, possibly from patriarchal revelation or direct divine inspiration.

Study Questions

1. Why does God veil His glory rather than revealing it fully to His creatures?
2. How does Christ as the visible image of the invisible God fulfill Job's theology of divine self-veiling?
3. What does God's transcendence teach about proper reverence and worship?
