

Job 27:22

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For God shall cast upon him, and not spare: he would fain flee out of his hand.

Analysis

For God shall cast upon him, and not spare (בְּשַׁלֵּךְ עָלָיו וְלֹא יִחְמֹל) ve-yashlekh alav velo yachmol)—The verb shalak (שַׁלֵּךְ) means "to hurl, throw violently," used of God casting down enemies (Exodus 15:1). The phrase "not spare" uses chamal (חִמָּל), meaning to pity or have compassion. Job describes divine wrath as relentless missiles against the wicked. The phrase he would fain flee out of his hand (בָּרָךְ יִבְרֹךְ מִצְרָיו) uses barach (ברך, "flee") doubled for intensity. The wicked desperately tries escaping God's hand (yad, power), but futilely.

This echoes Amos 5:19: "As if a man did flee from a lion, and a bear met him." There is no escape from divine judgment. Hebrews 10:31 warns, "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." Job's theodicy argues the wicked cannot ultimately prosper—God's justice, though delayed, is certain. This anticipates Romans 2:5, storing up wrath against the day of wrath.

Historical Context

Job's friends argued suffering proves wickedness (retribution theology). Job counters that the wicked often prosper temporarily (Job 21), but ultimate judgment is certain. This aligns with Psalms 37 and 73—the righteous must wait for God's justice. Ancient wisdom literature across cultures struggled with delayed justice; Job affirms divine judgment while rejecting simplistic retribution theology.
