

Job 27:4

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

My lips shall not speak wickedness, nor my tongue utter deceit.

Analysis

My lips shall not speak wickedness (אַמְתָּדְבָרָה שְׁפָטִי עַלְּהָ) —the Hebrew avlah (עַלְּהָ) denotes injustice, unrighteousness, or moral perversity. Job vows his mouth will not compromise truth. Nor my tongue utter deceit (וְלֹשֶׁן אַמְתָּהָגָה רְמִיָּה) —remiyyah (רְמִיָּה) means deceit, treachery, or falsehood. The parallel structure emphasizes comprehensive verbal integrity: neither substantive wickedness nor tactical deception.

This oath directly challenges his friends' implicit demand that Job confess unknown sins to satisfy their retribution theology. Job refuses false confession—he will not slander God by attributing imaginary guilt to himself, nor will he abandon truth-telling to gain social peace. This anticipates Jesus's absolute truthfulness even unto death, and James's warning that the tongue is a fire set on hell's course (James 3:6). Verbal integrity reflects spiritual reality.

Historical Context

In Ancient Near Eastern oath-taking, invoking divine witness to one's truthfulness carried ultimate seriousness. Job's vow occurs after three dialogue cycles where his friends have pressured him to admit wrongdoing. His refusal to speak falsehood, even to end suffering and social alienation, demonstrates that truth-telling is non-negotiable for the righteous.
