

Job 31:1

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

I made a covenant with mine eyes; why then should I think upon a maid?

Analysis

Job declares: 'I made a covenant with mine eyes; why then should I think upon a maid?' The phrase karati verit le-eynay (כִּנְתִּי בְּרִית לְעֵינָי) I made a covenant with mine eyes) uses covenantal language for personal discipline. The verb hitbonen (הִתְבֹּנֵן, think upon) means to consider or gaze at with desire. Betulah (בָּתָלָה), maid) refers to a virgin or young woman. Job's covenant with his eyes addresses lustful thoughts, anticipating Jesus's teaching about adultery of the heart (Matthew 5:28). The verse models proactive holiness—Job didn't merely avoid external adultery but guarded his thought life.

Historical Context

Ancient Near Eastern law codes primarily addressed external actions. Job's concern with internal purity (thoughts and desires) reflects the biblical emphasis on heart holiness. This oath begins chapter 31's extended defense where Job invokes curses upon himself if guilty of various sins. The covenant with his eyes demonstrates that genuine righteousness addresses not just behavior but desire.
