

Job 32:20

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

I will speak, that I may be refreshed: I will open my lips and answer.

Analysis

I will speak, that I may be refreshed (אֶזְבְּרָה וְיִרְבֶּח לִי, adabberah ve-yirvach li)—The verb ravach (רָבֵח) means "to be wide, spacious, relieved." Elihu feels internal pressure requiring release through speech. The phrase I will open my lips and answer (אֶפְתַּח שְׁפָתִי וְאֶעֱתֶה) uses patach (פָּתֵח, "to open") and anah (עֲתֵה, "to answer, respond"). Elihu breaks his silence, unable to contain himself longer. This reveals both earnestness and possible pride—he must speak or burst (v. 19).

Elihu's youthful passion contrasts with the three friends' exhausted silence (32:1). Proverbs warns against hasty speech (Proverbs 29:20, "Seest thou a man that is hasty in his words? there is more hope of a fool than of him"), yet also values speaking truth (Proverbs 24:26). Elihu's speeches (chapters 32-37) offer theological insights superior to the three friends but still fall short of God's answer (chapters 38-41). This teaches that even earnest theological speech cannot substitute for divine revelation. We need God's Word, not merely human wisdom, however sincere.

Historical Context

Ancient Near Eastern wisdom dialogues typically featured multiple speakers offering perspectives. Elihu's late entrance (absent in chapters 1-31) has puzzled interpreters—some suggest later addition, others see deliberate literary structure. His emphasis on youth deferring to age reflects cultural honor codes (Leviticus 19:32), but also shows how suffering and truth can transcend cultural hierarchies. Elihu waited respectfully (32:4) but ultimately speaks with passionate conviction.
