

Job 33:20

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

So that his life abhorreth bread, and his soul dainty meat.

Analysis

So that his life abhorreth bread (wezihāmātū ḥayyātō lāhem, מִזְהָמָתָו לְחַיָּתָו לְהֵם)—The verb zāham means to loathe, feel disgust, or abhor. Life (ḥayyāh) itself recoils from bread (lehem), the staff of life. This depicts severe illness where appetite vanishes—the body rejects sustenance necessary for survival. Physical revulsion toward food signals mortal danger, the body shutting down its basic drives.

And his soul dainty meat (wēnapšō ma'ākal ta'āwāh, וְנֶפֶשׁ מְאַכֵּל תָּאַוָּה—Even delicacies (ma'ākal ta'āwāh, food of desire or appetite) that normally stimulate hunger become repulsive. The soul (nepeš) refuses what once gave pleasure. This progression shows suffering advancing from pain (v.19) to systemic shutdown. Elihu's description mirrors Job's own testimony: 'I have no appetite for food' (3:24, literal translation). The loss of desire for life's basic goods signals proximity to death.

Historical Context

Ancient Near Eastern culture viewed appetite and eating as signs of vitality and divine blessing. Abraham prepared a feast for angelic visitors (Genesis 18:6-8), and shared meals sealed covenants. Loss of appetite signaled serious illness or depression (1 Samuel 1:7, Psalm 102:4). Without modern medical intervention, prolonged inability to eat meant certain death. Elihu describes suffering's progression toward mortality.

Study Questions

1. How does losing appetite for life's normal pleasures during suffering redirect attention to deeper spiritual needs?
2. What does this description teach about empathy for those experiencing severe illness or depression?
3. How might God use the loss of earthly appetites to create hunger for Himself alone?
