

Job 33:27

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

He looketh upon men, and if any say, I have sinned, and perverted that which was right, and it profited me not;

Analysis

Elihu describes the repentant sinner's confession: "He looketh upon men, and if any say, I have sinned, and perverted that which was right, and it profited me not." The verb chata (חָטָא, "sinned") means to miss the mark. The verb avah (אַוָּה, "perverted") means to bend or distort. The final phrase "it profited me not" (lo-shavah li, לֹא־שָׁוָה לִי) acknowledges sin's ultimate futility. Elihu outlines the components of genuine repentance:

1. admission of sin
2. recognition of moral corruption
3. acknowledgment of sin's unprofitability.

From a Reformed perspective, this maps onto the doctrine of repentance requiring both confession and forsaking sin (Proverbs 28:13). The phrase "it profited me not" echoes Jesus' question: "What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" (Mark 8:36). True repentance recognizes sin's false promises and empty returns.

Historical Context

Confession and repentance were central to Israelite covenant relationship with God. The temple sacrificial system required confession accompanying offerings (Leviticus 5:5). Elihu's description reflects this covenantal theology. However, his implication that Job needs to make such confession misreads Job's situation—Job's suffering isn't punishment requiring repentance but testing requiring patience.
