

Job 33:28

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

He will deliver his soul from going into the pit, and his life shall see the light.

Analysis

He will deliver his soul from going into the pit (פָּדוּה נֶפֶשׁ מֵעַבֶּר בְּשַׁחַת, padah naphsho me'avor bashachat)—The verb padah (פָּדוּה) means "to ransom, redeem" through payment of a price. This is Exodus redemption language (Exodus 13:13, 15:13). The noun nephesh (נפשׁ, soul/life) represents the whole person. The shachat (שַׁחַת, pit) symbolizes death, Sheol, destruction (Psalm 30:3, 103:4). Elihu describes divine rescue from death. The phrase his life shall see the light (וְאֶתְּנָהּ בָּאָרֶת תְּרִאָה, v'etennah bar'at tereah) uses chayyah (חַיָּה, life) and or (אוֹר, light), symbol of life, favor, salvation (Psalm 36:9, 56:13).

This is proto-gospel language: redemption by ransom from death to life and light. Job 19:25's confession, "I know that my redeemer liveth," uses the same ga'al redemption terminology. Elihu's theology anticipates Christ, the ultimate Redeemer who paid the ransom (Mark 10:45, 1 Timothy 2:6) to deliver souls from the pit. Christ descended into death (1 Peter 3:19, Apostles' Creed) and rose, bringing believers from darkness to light (Colossians 1:13, 1 Peter 2:9).

Historical Context

Israelite theology struggled with death and afterlife understanding. The pit (shachat) or Sheol represented the grave, shadowy existence. Early OT texts offer limited hope beyond death (Ecclesiastes 9:10), but later texts develop resurrection hope (Daniel 12:2, Isaiah 26:19). Elihu's language of redemption from the pit suggests emerging confidence in God's power over death, fully revealed in Christ's resurrection (2 Timothy 1:10, "abolished death").

Study Questions

1. How does Christ's redemption fulfill Elihu's vision of deliverance from the pit?
2. What does seeing "the light" mean in terms of salvation and eternal life?
3. How should the certainty of redemption shape our view of physical death?
