

Job 33:4

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

The Spirit of God hath made me, and the breath of the Almighty hath given me life.

Analysis

Elihu declares: 'The Spirit of God hath made me, and the breath of the Almighty hath given me life.' The phrase ruach-El (רוּחַ אֱלֹהִים, Spirit of God) parallels nishmat Shaddai (נִשְׁמַת שָׁדָי, breath of the Almighty). Both asatni (עָשָׂתִי, made me) and techayeni (תְּחַיִּי, given me life) emphasize dependence on God for existence. Elihu establishes common ground with Job—both are creatures owing existence to God's creative breath. This acknowledgment of creaturely equality prepares Elihu's argument: neither can claim superiority, both must submit to divine wisdom.

Historical Context

Elihu's reference to God's Spirit creating and giving life echoes Genesis 2:7 where God breathed life into Adam. Ancient Near Eastern cosmologies portrayed humans as created by gods, but biblical creation uniquely emphasizes God's personal breath giving life. Elihu's self-description establishes humility—he speaks as fellow creature, not superior sage, yet claims divine inspiration for his words.
