

Job 37:13

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

He causeth it to come, whether for correction, or for his land, or for mercy.

Analysis

He causeth it to come, whether for correction, or for his land, or for mercy
(אם-לְשֵׁבֶט אֶם-לְאַרְצֹן אֶם-לְחֶסֶד יְמִצְאָהוּ, אֶם-לְשֵׁבֶט אֶם-לְאַרְצֹן אֶם-לְחֶסֶד יְמִצְאָהוּ)
—God sends weather with three distinct purposes: shevet (שֵׁבֶט, 'rod' or 'correction'), provision for artso ('His land'), or hesed (חֶסֶד, 'covenant loyalty/mercy'). The tripartite structure is masterful: same phenomenon (rain/storm), radically different intentions.

This verse is key to theodicy: suffering is not random. Rain may discipline rebels (correction), sustain crops (provision), or demonstrate undeserved grace (mercy). The same storm can simultaneously accomplish all three for different recipients. Elihu challenges Job to discern which purpose God intends, anticipating Jesus's question: 'Do you think those eighteen on whom the tower in Siloam fell were worse sinners?' (Luke 13:4).

Historical Context

Ancient agricultural societies understood rain's ambiguity: too little meant drought and famine; too much meant flood and destruction. Elihu theologically interprets this variability as purposeful divine speech—God communicates different messages through the same meteorological vocabulary.

Study Questions

1. How do you discern whether your current hardship is God's correction, provision for future growth, or undeserved mercy?
2. Why might God use the same tool (suffering/storms) for opposite purposes in different people's lives?
3. What does it mean that mercy (hesed) is listed alongside correction and provision—how is grace 'caused to come'?
