

Job 37:14

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Hearken unto this, O Job: stand still, and consider the wondrous works of God.

Analysis

Elihu commands Job: "Hearken unto this, O Job: stand still, and consider the wondrous works of God." The imperative ha'azin (הִאָזִין, "hearken") means to give ear, listen intently. The command amad (אָמַד, "stand still") means to cease movement, to pause. The verb hitbonen (הִתְבּוֹנֵן, "consider") means to discern or understand deeply. Elihu urges Job to stop striving and contemplate God's works in creation. This advice, though somewhat condescending in context, contains wisdom: anxious striving can blind us to God's revelation in nature. Psalm 46:10 commands similarly: "Be still, and know that I am God." From a Reformed perspective, natural revelation displays God's "eternal power and Godhead" (Romans 1:20). Yet Elihu's counsel falls short—Job needs more than nature meditation; he needs direct encounter with God, which Job 38-41 will provide. Still, Elihu rightly perceives that contemplating God's works cultivates humility and awe.

Historical Context

Ancient wisdom literature frequently appealed to nature as teacher (Proverbs 6:6-8, 30:24-28). Israelite theology saw creation as declaring God's glory (Psalm 19:1). However, fallen humanity suppresses this revelation (Romans 1:18-23), requiring special revelation to properly interpret natural revelation. Elihu's call to observe nature prepares for God's speeches focusing on creation's mysteries.
