

Job 38:20

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

That thou shouldest take it to the bound thereof, and that thou shouldest know the paths to the house thereof?

Analysis

"That thou shouldest take it to the bound thereof, and that thou shouldest know the paths to the house thereof?" God continues questioning about light and darkness—can Job guide them to their boundaries and pathways? The imagery treats light and darkness as entities with domains and routes. This emphasizes God's comprehensive knowledge versus human ignorance of creation's workings. The rhetorical question teaches that if Job cannot manage basic created phenomena, he certainly cannot judge God's governance of moral and spiritual realities.

Historical Context

The question employs contemporary understanding of natural phenomena while pointing beyond to divine mystery. Ancient people recognized they couldn't control day/night cycles—only God could. This would humble any presumption that humans could comprehend or direct God's purposes in history or individual lives.
