

Job 38:5

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Who hath laid the measures thereof, if thou knowest? or who hath stretched the line upon it?

Analysis

God asks: "Who hath laid the measures thereof, if thou knowest? or who hath stretched the line upon it?" The Hebrew maddeyha (מִדָּהּ, "its measures") and qav (קוֹ, "line") use surveying language. God challenges Job with creation's precise design—dimensions, proportions, mathematical precision. This reveals divine wisdom in establishing natural laws and cosmic order. The rhetorical questions expose human ignorance about creation's foundations while affirming God's sovereign craftsmanship. The interrogative structure characterizes God's entire speech, reorienting Job from demanding answers to recognizing his creatureliness.

Historical Context

Ancient Near Eastern creation accounts lacked the mathematical precision suggested here. Genesis 1 similarly emphasizes ordered creation through divine decree. The surveying imagery would resonate with Job's original audience familiar with land measurement and building construction. God's questions assert that creation required infinite wisdom beyond any human architect or builder.
