

Job 42:13

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

He had also seven sons and three daughters.

Analysis

---

"He had also seven sons and three daughters." God gives Job exact same number of children as before (1:2). Some interpreters suggest this indicates the previous children still lived in God's presence, so Job eventually had double (including those who died). The specific replacement demonstrates God's attention to detail in restoration. This teaches that God's restoration is comprehensive and specific—He doesn't provide generic blessing but addresses particular losses.

Historical Context

In ancient patriarchal culture, children—especially sons—represented blessing, legacy, and economic security. Losing children was the deepest grief. God's provision of exactly the same number demonstrated complete restoration. This would profoundly comfort grieving parents, assuring that God sees and addresses their specific losses.
