

Job 42:16

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

After this lived Job an hundred and forty years, and saw his sons, and his sons' sons, even four generations.

Analysis

"After this lived Job an hundred and forty years, and saw his sons, and his sons' sons, even four generations." Job lives 140 additional years—possibly double his previous age, matching double restoration of possessions (v.10). Seeing four generations represents fullness of blessing in ancient thought. God grants Job comprehensive restoration—time to enjoy fully what he received. This teaches that God's restoration isn't merely replacement but opportunity to experience blessing richly. Divine redemption provides time to heal, enjoy, and appreciate what is restored.

Historical Context

Ancient patriarchal culture viewed long life and many descendants as supreme blessings, signs of divine favor. Four generations witnessed represented remarkable longevity and fertility. This comprehensive blessing demonstrated complete divine restoration, teaching that God's redemption addresses all dimensions of life—possessions, relationships, and time.
