

Job 5:10

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Who giveth rain upon the earth, and sendeth waters upon the fields:

Analysis

Eliphaz continues: 'Who giveth rain upon the earth, and sendeth waters upon the fields.' Rain represents God's providential care and blessing (Deuteronomy 11:14). Eliphaz uses creation theology to support his retribution theology—if God sends rain (blessing) faithfully, He must also send drought (curse) for sin. This assumes a mechanistic relationship between righteousness and prosperity that Jesus explicitly denies (Matthew 5:45). God's providence is gracious, not merely retributive.

Historical Context

Rain was crucial for ancient Near Eastern agricultural societies, often interpreted as divine favor while drought indicated divine displeasure. Eliphaz reflects this common theological framework.

Study Questions

1. How does Jesus's teaching that God sends rain on the just and unjust challenge simple retribution theology?
2. What does God's common grace teach us about the relationship between righteousness and earthly blessing?
