

Job 5:9

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Which doeth great things and unsearchable; marvellous things without number:

Analysis

Eliphaz praises God: 'Which doeth great things and unsearchable; marvellous things without number.' The Hebrew 'gadol' (great), 'ein cheger' (unsearchable—no investigation), and 'pele' (marvellous/wonderful) acknowledge God's incomprehensible wisdom. This is true theology—God's ways transcend human understanding (Romans 11:33). Ironically, Eliphaz uses this truth to support false conclusions. The fact that God's ways are unsearchable should humble us from dogmatic pronouncements about others' suffering, not embolden them.

Historical Context

Hymnic praise of divine incomprehensibility appears throughout ancient Near Eastern wisdom literature. Eliphaz's doxology follows conventional patterns but applies the truth wrongly.

Study Questions

1. How does the doctrine of God's incomprehensibility affect how you counsel suffering people?
2. In what ways should God's unsearchable wisdom make us hesitant to explain others' trials definitively?
