

Job 6:10

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Then should I yet have comfort; yea, I would harden myself in sorrow: let him not spare; for I have not concealed the words of the Holy One.

Analysis

Job explains why death would comfort him: 'Then should I yet have consolation; yea, I would harden myself in sorrow: let him not spare; for I have not concealed the words of the Holy One.' Death would bring 'consolation' (Hebrew 'nechamah'—comfort) because Job has not denied God. The phrase 'not concealed the words of the Holy One' indicates Job has maintained orthodox faith despite suffering. His comfort in death would be knowing he died faithful—he hasn't cursed God as Satan predicted (1:11, 2:5).

Historical Context

Dying with integrity intact was highly valued in ancient Near Eastern ethics. Job's comfort in potential death rests not on escaping suffering but on maintaining faithfulness—a distinctly biblical value.
